

Alloys for High-Temperature Use

8.36 Three metallurgical/processing techniques that are employed to enhance the creep resistance of metal alloys are (1) solid solution alloying, (2) dispersion strengthening by using an insoluble second phase, and (3) increasing the grain size or producing a grain structure with a preferred orientation.