

PSPA 211
Final Examination
Summer Session of 1999

Answer the following Question:

The structural-functional approach stresses the importance of a number of variables in political performance. State some of the most important variables and explain how they operate. In your judgment, does this model apply in real political situations as we experience them? Give evidence to support your argument. It is important for your discussion to tackle the issue of the relevance (or lack of it) of the model for Third World countries wishing to develop.
